The Lost Coast

is 29 miles of pristine wilderness beach and canyons in Northern California...

A setting removed from this century; wild, primordial, filled with wildlife.

It's common to stroll on the beach amidst recent tracks of seal, raccoon, wildcat, coyote, fox and bear within an hour – even to see the animals, walking. It is a place of profound and haunting beauty...blending mountains, flats, canyons and sea.

"You haven't lived until you have walked in the woods with Peter Wolf"
-Gary Stewart, Los Angeles

The Journey: We will bring just what we need on this gentle adventure, but this isn't just a 'backpacking' trip. The object is a transformation - from ordinary everyday patterns, to a cross cultural, time-proven extraordinary group experience of becoming receptive to, and connecting with the Earth.

Wilderness, as Psychologist Robert Greenway suggests, is the original, untainted, healthy mind. It is a physical place, but also an internal state. Wilderness isn't just a place to 'survive', or do mileage. Immersion with skill richens life. The intent is to immerse, and receive lasting gifts from the spirit of the land. This is an aspect of what is now called "Ecopsychology". Peter Wolf will give you tools, to help you integrate nature's gifts and simplicity... back into the volume, pressure and speed of modern daily life. This experience gives a deeply memorable adventure, from which people report lasting effects years later.

On "culture": When we get physically and ritually removed enough from our culture, it's easier to break its habit patterns - which we may not notice have been limiting. Peoples who lived close to the Earth were more attuned by nature to their surroundings; it was where they lived. They developed cultures by their relationship to Earth's pulse, as to their relationship with each other. Today, people rarely learn how to let nature speak -- to teach us, to relax, heal, and help us become more focused, more aware, and stronger at the core. This journey can bring profound positive changes: for initiative, for creative thinking "out of the box," and the ability to find communion amidst the speed, volume and pressures in daily living.

"Ritual Journey": This trip includes a rich blend of ceremony, levity, kind-heartedness, sharing of strengths, access to personal insight. Folks often find that they want to know each other long after the trip is over.

Simple preparation:

- 1) If you don't already, please consider eating more whole foods; less refined and addictive things. It can improve physical stamina and overall disposition.
- 2) For weeks prior to the trip, substitute simply walking with your pack and boots, instead of the gym a few days a week. You'll find that it gives remarkable strength, aerobics, and a new coordination and balance, which you (and others) will appreciate.

- Helpful tips on preparation and packing list will be sent on receipt of registration.
